Wellman appears to have made a sistake in thinking that the southful of the ice, which stopped Parry dvancing in 1877, would afford no be to himself so early in the year, and this view has proved it is through having caught the deep pack ice that the explorers suffered. It should be observed it wellman's theory on the subtile left of the best ice pilots in the er and pilot, Captain Emil Peders of the best ice pilots in the who last year was the ice pilot of idain Wiggins' expedition as far mouth of the Yenesel river. Wellman's expedition had a spediethretive feature which is soon bed-it was a sledging expedition, all his predecessors in the rough of Arctic exploration pursued a displan. They took their ship with and tried to sail to the Pole. Then their vessel was caught hopelessly in the lee or ruined or sunk they a last resort to the ice, and with my prepared and unscientific sleighment made their way back as bey could. A NOVEL AND ELABORATE EQUIPMENT.

From the accounts of the expedition which have already appeared in the Herald, and from the Interesting letters contributed to its columns by Mr. Wellman himself, just before he vanished northward across the boundary line of civilization, it will have been seen that the equipment of the party was prepared with the greatest care. An important and novel feature was the use of aluminum in the construction of boats and sledges. Three small boats were constructed of this metal, and built on the lines of surf boats of the United States life saving service. In this way great strength was secured, with extreme lightness. The metal was ninety-seven parts of aluminum and three parts copper, with a tensile strength of 54,000 pounds to the square inch, caual to the very best from, and only about one-third its weight. The boats had sledge bottoms, so that they could be used alike on land or water. In the same fashion the six sledges, which were also made of aluminum, and would carry six hundred pounds, might, if necessary, be converted into boats. Another device is worthy of special mention. When two ice-fields collide the ice rises up to a height of twenty or thirty feet, and the crossing of these ridges or hummocks has hitherto occasioned much delay. In order to surmount this difficulty Mr. Wellman took with him a set of aluminum bridges, one was to be used to reach the top of a ridge, the other to cross it, and a third for the purpose of descent. The three were nited so as to form a tramway over which boats, sledges, men and dogs might be able to pass. These bridges weighed 150 pounds each, and would support a load of 1,000 pounds. The draught dogs were taken from Helgium and Holland, for Mr. Wellman believed that years of hard work rendered their feet tougher than the feet of Esquimum dogs. But if necessary they were to have been provided with boots, after the fashion observed by the Tschukts, of Siberla. The expedition also took with it highly concentrated food, desicated veretables, a

PERSONNEL OF THE PARTY.

Mr. Walter Wellman, the organizer and captain of the expedition, was a native of Ohio, and came of New England stock. He was thirty-five years of ale, and five feet, ten and one-half inches in height. He was a journalist well known in Washington, and three years ago was the leader of an expedition to discover the spot where Columbus landed in the West Indies. All his life he had been interested in the literature of arctic exploration, but two years ago took up the study seriously, with a view to an expedition of his own. Last summer he went to Denmark and Norway to glean information as to the Splitzbergen route and made all bis preliminary arrangements. Returning to America, he organized his expedition, constructed his outfit, which contains several novel features, chartered a steamer in Norway and made up his party. Next he went across to Belgium to buy dogs, and then proceeded to Norway, whence he started upon his ill-fated northern journey.

The other American members of the party were Professor Owen E. French, aged twenty-clark, a civil engineer by profession and a member of the Constand Geodetic Survey. Washington; Dr. Thomas B. Mohun, aged forty, physician and surgeon, Washington; Charles C. Dodge, aged thirty, draughtsman and constructor of the aluminum boats. Another member was Alfred S. Franklin of New York. GORMAN AT THE WRITE HOUSE. How He Came to Go There and What He

The Washington correspondent of the New York Times gives this version of Gorman's interview with the President on the day the former delivered his now famous speech.

As Mr. Gorman has chosen to allow accounts of his visit to the White House to go to the newspapers in such form as to misrepresent the facts of that visit, it may be just as well to say something about how Mr. Gorman came to call there and what was done while he was there.

Colonel Lamont has been described in a longether fanciful story of the meeting, published in a New York paper, as having secured for Mr. Gorman the honor of the request to call upon the President.

ing, published in a New York paper, as having secured for Mr. Gorman the honor of the request to call upon the President.

The fact is that Colonel Lamont has not seen Mr. Gorman for three months, and has had no communication with him on this subject.

Mr. Brice called upon the President Saturday afternoon and uggested that perhaps the situation could be bettered if the President would ask Mr. Gorman to call upon him to talk it over.

Acting upon Mr. Brice's suggestion, the President wrote a note to Mr. Gorman, asking him if he would call upon him Monday morning. This was before the reports had been published indicating that Mr. Gorman capected to attack the President.

Before koing to the Senate yesterday morning Mr. Gorman called at the White House. He was there about half an hour, and during that time, while the tariff bill was discussed, and the President learned from Mr. Gorman that he expected there would be an ultimate agreement in the conference, Mr. Gorman, beyond saying that he intended to make a statement during the day, did not give the President the impression that he was to be assailed, and did not say that he would make the speech unless he dropped dead betore he reached the Capitol, and did not refuse to withhold his speech, because the President mide no request that he should speak of refrain from speaking.

Mr. Gorman's friends do not deny today that the meeting was free from unpleasant controversy, that Mr. Gorman manifested none of the anger which he developed in the Senate, and that nothing in his demeanor prepared the President for carrying the elections of 184 and 182.

The President, of course, cannot enter into a controversy in the newspapers about the details of a conversation held with a visitor to use White House, invited by himself.

It is considered by the President entirely safe to leave to the public the decision in this controversy with perfect confidence that there will be a fair judgment as between Mr. Gorman and the President.

Everybody feels better from Brown's Iron Bitters.

Offerings and Sales at the Richmord Tobacco Exchange Internal Revenue

NEW YORK, July 25.—The opening dealings at the Stock Exchange were characterized by strength, so far as American Sugar was concerned, but the general market for a time was dull and steady. The room operated in the Grangers on reports from the West about the damage to the growing corn, and efforts were made to further depress the list on the appearance of the poor earning's showing of the third week in July and the likelihood of there being gold shipments by Saturday steamers. The most important road which gave out its earnings for the third week was St. Paul, and showed a falling off of $122,100, as compared with the corresponding period of hast year. $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 were estimated gold shipments Saturday. They will certainly reach $2,000,000, it is said, and unless there is a material increase in the supply of bills, $5,000,000 will have to be forwarded. It is said by the substantially informed, that bankers, at the present time, do not see how his shipments can be averted. The decline in the active Railway list ranged from it to 13, per cent. St. Paul declined in the active Railway list ranged from it to 13, and New York Central 1½. Among the inactive issues, Wheeling and Lake Eric preferred sold down 2%, to 40 and railled to 41%. The decline was the result of a rumor that the August dividend would not be paid. The question will be settled at a directors meeting on Tuesiay. Pullman broke to 155 and closed at 157 bild. American Sonar sold at its highest near the conning on the failure of the Democatic senators to get together at the caucus to-day. This, of course, was interpreted as favorable to the refining interests. The stock at the time sold up 1½, to 104%, and closed a point higher on the day at 104%. There seems to be some question as to the standing of the company since the granting of the franchise to the liveresal Gas company by the Common Council. Insiders here assert that the company must continue to pay 24, per cent, of its kross earnings to the price of ms until 1897, when it shall be $1 was weaker and declined to 17%. The stock is without support and liquidation on a moderate scale continues. United States Cordage stocks were also weak, the common selling down to 20 and the preferred to 35. Speculation left off irregular. The general list showed net losses of 4.42 her cent. for the day, but American Susar gained I per cent. The total sales were 117.83 shares, of which 34,500 were Sugar. Pen Picture of Gorman.

The New York Sun, which is very partial to that senator, thus describes Mr. Gorman, of Maryland:

Senator Gorman is invariably fixed upon by visitors to the upper House, as the handsomest man in that body. The majority of senators are men whose early lives have told seriously upon their constitutions, or whose careers have been given over to easy living, excessive eating and drinking, and its attendant evils, until they have become practically shapeless. A large portion of them are pudgy in build and they are often bulky and unwieldy. In strong contrast are the tall, stoop-shouldered, and emachated figures, such as Peffer and McPherson. Even Voorhees, who was once a handsome and athletic six-footer, is now weighted with fat and exceedingly awkward in his gestures. Among them Gorman looks like a thoroughbred racer contrasted with a lot of eart horses. He is a little above the medium height, with broad shoulders, an unusually small waist, straight legs, and small hands and feet. His head is well set upon his shoulders, covered by a lot of silky hair, which is kept close-cut so us to define the classical outlines of his head and face, and his eyes are large and unusually expressive. He speaks in a musical and well-modulated volce, and his fresh color is noticeable in a man of his years. He is altogether a strikingly picturesque figure in a body of men which is not distinguished for aesthetic or manly beauty.
